Peaceful Warrior: The Life of Ken Paul Lozada

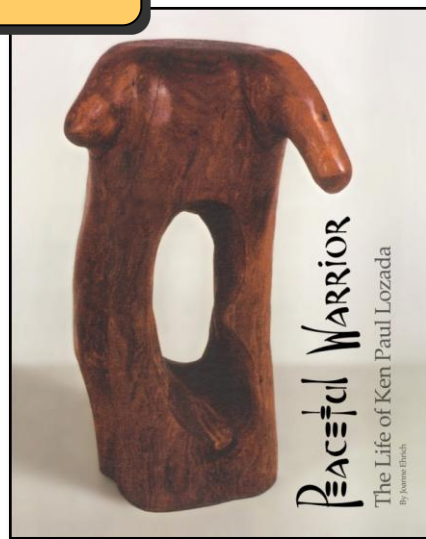

By Joanne Ehrich

Of those once drawn to Ken Paul Lozada's sculpture garden at Main Street, Half Moon Bay, to get a closer look at gravity-defying wood fragments he has given a new life, many found their initial interest giving way to a sense of wanting to know more about their creator. A biographical glimpse at the sculptor and author of The Seven Treasures of Life, contains family photos spanning five generations and hand-written dialogues with his sculptures. They reveal that these discarded, once-majestic trees are symbols of restoration.

A near-death experience after a car accident left Ken, who spent many years in an orphanage, with a new understanding about the gift of life which he has since sought to share with others—revealing his arboreal creations to be messengers about the sacred nature all humans possesses within. He has surrendered to complete honesty and openness, while becoming a conveyor of truth.
